

Disability Liaison Officer (DLO) roles with health services

Who is this information for?

For people with a disability, their supports, disability and health professionals.

Disability Liaison Officers

Who we are: The Disability Liaison Officers are a Department of Health and Human Services program that addresses the health needs of Victorians with a disability. The Officers will assist the coordination of healthcare for adults with disabilities.

Why we want to help: People with disabilities have high levels of health needs making them particularly vulnerable to COVID-19. Some individuals require additional healthcare support, including; prevention, testing, management and treatment.

What we can do: Disability Liaison Officers can provide specialised disability information and support to the person, their supports, and treating teams to assist assessment, management, and discharge planning for people with disabilities. We can also provide education, and resources, to assist in achieving better outcomes for patients, their supports and others including disability and health professionals.

Eligibility criteria

- People aged 16 years and older
- Have a diagnosis of a disability
- Require support to access healthcare services
